The Pattern of World Conflict (1961) 421-424: This book focuses on the study of history and how society is shaped by the patterns of world conflict. It explores the causes, effects, and consequences of conflict, and how they shape the course of human history. The book argues that conflict is a fundamental aspect of human interaction and that it has been a driving force in the development of societies around the world. It examines the role of power, ideology, culture, and economics in shaping the patterns of conflict, and how these factors have changed over time. The book also presents a comprehensive analysis of the major conflicts of the 20th century, including World War I, World War II, the Cold War, and the conflict in the Middle East. It offers a critical assessment of the various theories of conflict and proposes a new framework for understanding the patterns of world conflict.

Theell's textbooks have been translated into numerous languages and are widely used in schools and universities around the world. They provide a comprehensive and engaging introduction to the study of history and conflict, and are highly regarded by students and scholars alike.
